"At 10:30 p. m., May 27, a force of Japanese infantry from 'Kuan Dian Sian commenced a frontal flank attack upon the position occupied by our Cossacks near Shaogo, fifteen versts northwest of Kuan Dian Sian. The Japanese, under the cover of darkness, opened a running, desultory fire, using field searchlights. The Cossacks retired on foot to Chanlin pass, two versts west of Shaoago, and subsequently on Ai Yang Pien Men, six teen versts west of Chanlin pass, The firing ceased at 2 a. m. May 27, when the Japanese ceased the pursuit at the entrance of Chanlin pass.

Cossacks Retired.

"The same day the first section of a Japanese detachment approached Ai Yang Pien Men, but afterwards retired to the summit of the hills west fired to see chair cannot enforce that rule without the co-operation of the delegates, and the chair desires to know what the will of the convention is." Then he put to vote the question of enforcing the "no smoking" rule "literally everywhere in the hall."

The affirmative vote was practically unanimous and the chairman then gave premptory instructions to the assistant sergeants-at-arms and the polifice to see that all smoking in the hall was prevented; delegates who do not cease when requested, to be reported to the chair for the action of the convention, and persons not delegates who persistently violate the rule to be ejected from the hall.

"The same day the first section of a Japanese detachment approached Ai Yang Pien Men, but afterwards retired to the summit of the hills west of the town. At 10 a.m. they formed up in order of battle, the force consisting of two battalions, with one other in reserve. At 11 a.m. a battery of artillery took up a position and opened fire with shrapnel. While crossing the valley, the Japanese infantry, advancing in close formation, suffered heavily. At 11:20 the Cossacks, observing that the Japanese were turning their right flank, retired for good order on Salmatsza. The fire of the rear guard ceased at 2 p. m. We lost two officers and seven Cossacks."

The statement emanating from Paris that General Kuropatkin was sending 30:000 troops to the southward in an attempt to save Port Arthur from the Japanese is declared here to be untrue.

Philip Robertson, a strictly reliable man, prospector and miner, received the dying man's confession, and tells the story simply and dramatically. Robertson left the Klondike capital, he says, late last fall in a small boat bound for the new placer grounds at Fairbanks. He reached a point near Dahlney river in a particularly desolate and forbidding region, when the foreform walling of a dog surprised his cars. He found the dog, a half-starved shepherd, seemingly in much distress. Following this animal Robertson was brought to a seemingly deserted cabin some 400 yards above the river conceled in a clump of spruce.

Dying Man Found.

"I ventured to the door of the shack and knocked," says Robertson, "and there was a feeble 'come in."

"All was darkness inside and there with the pentition of the chart of the Alaskan wilderness, which clearly he solicited alms on the streets. Butte, May 31.—John Burns, a teamster, was seriously if not fatally wounded by being shot by Fred Logan at Berg's saloon, three blocks south of the Olympia brewery. The affray is said to have originated over the attempt of Logan to drive away with a buggy which three young ladies had left standing in front of Berg's. Burns protested and a quarrefollowed, which ended in the shooting of Burns.
